

The university has traditionally been the space for words and commitment, a commitment to a more fair, advanced, democratic and inclusive society. In short, a commitment to work for a better world in all senses. From this perspective, the University of Barcelona has set itself the priority of aligning its activity with the achievement of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) established by the United Nations through 2030 Agenda.

The UB Solidarity Foundation is the area of the University of Barcelona responsible for promoting and implementing this commitment, together with the rest of the university community. The Foundation was created in 1996 by the University of Barcelona and the Món-3 Foundation, an NGDO with a distinctly university character.

The Foundation promotes cooperation projects for development, peace and human rights, and social intervention projects against exclusion on the basis of the initiatives, resources and capacities of the university community.

It works in fields such as social agriculture, solidarity economy, rural development, environment, water and sanitation, defence of human rights and of those who promote them, refugee reception, democratic memory, and education for citizenship. It also manages the UB Volunteering programme, which promotes university community volunteering in third sector organisations.
